Local Libraries and Community Building

Centered on Eunhaengnamu Children's Library

Kim, Hyeong Ho

Kyung Hee University

This study analyzes local libraries as a suggestion for a community building that community crisis or decline. Below are making short of the research.

First, not only cultivating the best neighborly relations, but also the mechanism of developing local community identity and collaboration can be found from the case of 'Eunhaengnamu Children Library' even in poor surroundings. Second, the library is located in a house building and is open always. It is providing familiar and comfortable moods at the same time its accessibility and openness level are very high in this regard. Third, although it's called children library, the 'Eunhaengnamu Children Library' is distinguished since all the generation from children to adults participates in library. Fourth, contribution, local residents and volunteers called 'Jikimee'(means guardians in Korean) take important role in maintenance and operation of the library. Finally, the library is functioning as not only book library, but also as community education and consideration for a neglected class of people. They are considering as well as practicing of programs and supporting plans for small scale libraries to live together. Thus, cooperation can be found at the library.

In summary, the Eunhaengnamu Children's Library is a major factor in
